The Institute of Politics (IOP) at the University of Pittsburgh dedicated much of its 2015 annual retreat for elected officials on the topic of mass incarceration. Allegheny County Executive Rich Fitzgerald asked IOP to assemble a group of distinguished civic leaders to examine what could be done to make incarceration policies and practices in Allegheny County “fairer and less costly, without compromising public safety.”

This lecture series provides an opportunity for faculty, students, and community members to engage in race-related discussions of mutual interest.
